

Vaeira: When Patience Is Not a Virtue

Jonathan Greenblatt, CEO and National Director of the Anti-Defamation League, addressed our Sinai Temple congregation last Shabbat. The “torrent” of antisemitic hate, he said, is alarming in its pervasiveness, touching every corner of our lives. “Perhaps what’s most terrifying, most shocking,” he admitted, “is the fact that we’ve almost become numb to it.”

That we are inured to the rising tide of antisemitism is dismaying—but it isn’t shocking. It’s a story as old as our people. “Say to the Israelites,” God tells Moses: “I will free you from the burdens of the Egyptians and deliver you from their bondage” (Exodus 6:6). The word for “burdens,” sivlot, is related to the word sovlanut, “tolerance.” Their tolerance of the suffering inflicted upon them, teaches Rabbi Simcha Bunim, was the Israelites’ true burden. They had grown so accustomed to a reality of blame, shame, and fear that they came to see it as normal.

It is not normal, God said, to be enslaved. Nor is it normal, said Jonathan Greenblatt, to be harassed, intimidated, and assaulted on campus, in the synagogue, or at the beach. We must fight this new status quo with our voices, our votes, and our values—but first, we must fight the inclination within ourselves to remain indifferent.

It was when the Israelites were no longer willing to bear their burdens that redemption was soon at hand. How long are we willing to bear our own?

Shabbat Shalom.

A MESSAGE FROM PRESIDENT MEHRZAD ROSHAN

The situation in Iran has become increasingly grave. What is unfolding is not simply unrest but a campaign of repression against civilians who are demanding basic freedom. Thousands have been killed by militias in the streets. We have seen scenes in the news of families searching for their loved ones in morgues and hospitals.

We as Jews understand what it means to face persecution. History teaches us that injustice grows when the world looks away. We are far from Iran, but we are not indifferent to the suffering of its people.

May we see Iran and the Iranian people free from oppression and from a government that not only denies its people their basic human dignity but is also an enemy of Israel and the United States.
